

ABSTRACT

Performing a search of a set of ratios for a maximum or minimum using parallel processing blocks. Various computations related to processing the ratios to determine which is a best value are performed in parallel processing blocks. Splitting the computations into parallel processing paths localizes sequential data dependency by localizing ratio computation and comparison to elements associated with each separate block. After each block determines a local best value, a global best value may be determined.